Network Rail is responsible for the maintenance of railway infrastructure such as signalling, bridges, tunnels, stations, and depots. The sale of the HS2 maintenance depots has been a subject of debate, with concerns raised about the impact on local communities and the availability of local skills. The sale of depots is part of a wider strategy to privatize public assets, with the aim of improving efficiency and cost-effectiveness. However, the sale of HS2 depots has raised questions about the potential impact on local employment and the maintenance of critical infrastructure. The HS2 project has been controversial due to its cost and potential impact on the environment, and the sale of depots is one aspect of this broader debate.
